"Brücke intervened in Freud's favor. In June 1885, Freud was given six months' leave from his functions at the hospital. On October 13, still a regular user of cocaine, he moved into the Hôtel (...)

That evening, he had absorbed a small dose of cocaine, had had his beard trimmed and his hair cut, and he was proudly wearing his new clothes: a black suit, an impeccable shirt, a tie bought in Hamburg (...)"

(ibid., p. 46-48)